

Edward Rowe

Edward Rowe loved music and he and George Hitchings used to be friends. (George Hitchings lived in a little house located where Ann Roberts lives.) Grandma said they would play taps on their house to one another from each others door steps. (Grandma said she respected Mr. Hitchings very much because after Edward died she never once heard him play taps or calls again.)

Edward went with the band on a pleasure trip to Salt Lake, there they (some of the members) got to playing and some of them made a dare to see who was the strongest man, the man who could lift dead weight would be the one who was the strongest. Edward took them up on the deal, and a member called Sam Davis stretched out, Edward lifted him but as he did an artery or something inside his body broke, as a result they brought him home a sick man. He only lived a few days. He was like he was burning up inside, and they couldn't give him enough water to drink. (There used to be a big well on the city park and he would ask Grandma to send and get him some of the water.)
